Framed by the famous Gateway Arch in downtown St. Louis, the Citygarden is a patron of the local community, its visitors and the artists housed within. In response to the objectives set forth by the client, the landscape architect designed a sculpture garden that honors the Region’s heritage, historical roots and natural topography. Two firms collaborated to meet the demands of the project; one firm tending to lighting the landscape, hardscape and waterscape to embrace the botanical theme and the other to create a visually striking, yet contextually sensitive, presentation of the art; while ensuring a secure urban nighttime experience.

ATHER OF MERIT

“There is little more for which a lighting designer can ask than to be given an opportunity to contribute indelibly to the quality of the built environment. This project provided such an opportunity for our collaborative team, and the results have helped in shaping the future of urban public space development in the city of Saint Louis.”
Randy Burkett

“It was an honor and a pleasure to work with Randy Burkett. His great expertise and local knowledge was key to the success of the project. We have helped transform a piece of downtown St. Louis.”
Charles Stone